ASC Industry Veteran, Jim Freund, Joins Medical Web Technologies as Vice President of Business Development

Willington, CT – February 26, 2013 – Medical Web Technologies, developer of the leading internet-based pre-admission solution One Medical Passport, today announced that Jim Freund has joined the company as its new Vice President of Business Development. In this role, Freund will be responsible for expanding the company’s presence in the surgery center and surgical hospital space.

“Jim is one of a select few in our industry with extensive experience and in-depth knowledge of the ambulatory surgery center market,” said Stephen Punzak, MD, founder and CEO of Medical Web Technologies. “His hands-on approach and deep knowledge are a welcome addition. I fully expect Jim will be instrumental in helping us create broader awareness of the benefits of One Medical Passport including a better experience for patients and the ability to save facilities substantial time and money.”

Prior to joining One Medical Passport, Freund spent 25 years in the ambulatory surgery center market, most of it as a principal with leading software management firms including the founding of Source Medical. During this time he worked with hundreds of surgery centers, along with many of the leading management firms, consultants, vendors, and organizations that are focused on the ASC market. He has been named to the annual Who's Who in the ASC industry, as one of Becker's “People to Know”, and has been a frequent conference speaker and contributor to numerous industry publications.

“The development of One Medical Passport significantly changed the pre-admission process, streamlining it to the point where I can’t imagine an ASC, or any surgical facility, not using this revolutionary online solution,” states Freund. “This solution does all the things that an ASC is looking for - it improves the patient experience, reduces demand on ASC staff, minimizes cancellations and delays, and provides a positive return on investment. It is exciting to be working with such an exceptional company.”
